Contents

1. How this document was produced
2. Signing in — addresses and credentials
3. The role model — who may do what
4. What each role actually sees
5. The approval rules
6. Booking an order, step by step
7. An order's life, station by station
8. The screen atlas — all 61 admin screens
9. The customer's own account
10. The same screens on a phone and a tablet
11. The verification record

How this document was produced

This is not a written description of the software. Every screenshot below was taken by a script that signed in as a real seeded user, navigated to a real URL, and photographed whatever came back. The red outline in each image was drawn by that same script around the element the caption refers to, so the caption cannot drift away from the picture.

The whole document regenerates from three commands:

npx playwright test -c e2e/evidence/evidence.config.ts
DB_DATABASE=rusukh_demo php artisan handbook:export-reference node e2e/evidence/build-handbook.mjs

What that buys you

- No screenshot can be stale without the document noticing. The capture clears the previous run's images first, and this generator drops any figure whose file is not on disk, so a screen that has been removed cannot leave a convincing old photograph behind.
- No screen can be photographed while broken. Each capture asserts the response was below HTTP 400 before the shutter. A 403 or a 500 fails the run rather than becoming a figure — with one deliberate exception, the refusal in §4, where the error is the evidence.
- No rule is retyped. The role, permission and approval tables come from `handbook:export-reference`, which reads them out of the database. Change a threshold and regenerate, and this document changes with it.

Which database these pictures came from, and why it matters

Everything here was photographed against `rusukh_demo`, built from an empty database by the documented `migrate:fresh --seed` and verified before use. That choice is deliberate and worth explaining, because it is the difference between evidence and decoration.

The everyday development database looks identical on screen and is not honest: it was seeded before the stage-gate work landed, so it carries 286 gate rows with zero evidence rows behind them. The gate board renders green, and the first attempt to actually advance a garment is refused — because the evaluator recomputes each gate from its evidence every time it is asked and never trusts the stored flag. A handbook illustrated from that database would be showing you a board that does not mean what it appears to mean.

The number that separates the two: 151 stage gates standing on 569 evidence rows, all 151 of which re-evaluate as genuinely passing. That check is part of the release procedure in 04-TESTING-AND-VERIFICATION.md §7.

One difference between these pictures and a brand-new installation

The dashboards below show real computed figures — pipeline value, QC pass rate, delivery success. A freshly seeded installation will not. Every dashboard tile reads "awaiting data" under a banner saying the figures are not being computed yet, and that is correct rather than broken: the KPI engine writes a snapshot on a nightly schedule, at 01:00, and a database created this afternoon has not had one yet. The application deliberately shows an em dash rather than a zero, because a fabricated zero on a quality metric would read as an accusation.

These screenshots were taken after running that job by hand against the demo database, so the handbook shows what the panel looks like in use rather than on its first day. Two things follow for a real deployment. The scheduler entry must be installed — one `* * * * *` `php artisan schedule:run` line — and a queue worker must be running, because `schedule:run` only places these jobs on the `maintenance` queue. Without a worker the dashboards stay empty forever and nothing reports an error. See 03-PRODUCTION-DEPLOYMENT.md §4.

Signing in — addresses and credentials

Two separate front doors, two separate guards. Staff and customers do not share a login, a session, or a permission set, and no staff account can act as a customer — a point $3 returns to, because it surprises people.

Who	Address	Lands on
Staff	/login	/admin/dashboard
Customers	/customer/login	/account
Customer self-registration	/customer/register	/account after email verification
Password reset (customer)	/customer/forgot-password	emailed link

The seeded staff roster

These are the accounts a fresh `migrate:fresh --seed` creates, and the accounts every screenshot in this document was taken with. All thirteen share one password on a seeded installation.

Change every one of these before the system carries real work. They exist so a new installation can be explored and demonstrated immediately; they are published in this document and in the repository, so they are not secrets and must never be treated as any.

The seeded customers

All customer logins share the password `Rusukh#Client2026`.

- `ahmed.raza@gmail.com`
- `bilal.siddiqui@gmail.com`
- `faisal.malik@gmail.com`

Two-factor authentication

Seeded accounts are not enrolled. `finance` and `super_admin` are the two roles the middleware treats as requiring it, so signing in as either lands on the enrolment screen at `/admin/identity/security/two-factor` rather than the dashboard. That is the guard working, not a failed login — the session is valid either way, and navigating to the dashboard works normally.

The role model — who may do what

Rusukh has 14 roles and 288 named permissions. A role is a bundle of permissions; a user holds a role. Nothing in the application asks "is this person an admin" — every gate asks for a specific named permission, which is why the sidebar a role sees and the routes it may open are the same list.

Permissions by family

Each permission is named `<area>.<thing>.<verb>`. The families:

Family	Permissions
<code>production.*</code>	39
<code>crm.*</code>	32
<code>orders.*</code>	26
<code>finance.*</code>	21
<code>identity.*</code>	21
<code>inventory.*</code>	19

<code>account.*</code>	16
<code>shipping.*</code>	15
<code>catalog.*</code>	14

The one thing a super administrator cannot do

`super_admin` holds 272 of the 288 permissions. The 16 it does not hold are the `account.*` family — the customer portal's own permissions.

A super administrator cannot act as a customer. They cannot approve a specification on a patron's behalf, submit measurements as them, or pay their invoice from inside their account. Those acts have to come from the customer, which is what makes a customer approval worth anything when a dispute turns up later.

Roles that exist to be narrow

3 staff roles hold fewer than twenty permissions each, and that is the design rather than an incomplete setup: a cutter has 17; a tailor has 18; a finishing_packing has 18. Each can do their station and see what they need to do it, and nothing else. The evidence for that claim is in the next section — including one screenshot of the refusal itself, because a hidden link and a blocked route are very different things and only one of them is security.

What each role actually sees

The navigation is generated from the signed-in user's own permissions, so a photograph of it is a photograph of that role's reach. Thirteen roles, thirteen sidebars, all taken in the same session against the same database.

The last figure in this section is the important one. Everything above it shows what a role is offered; that one shows what happens when somebody ignores the offer and types the URL.

The URL was typed in full rather than clicked, bypassing the navigation entirely. The server answered 403. This is the check that matters: the sidebar screenshots above show what each role is offered, and this shows that the offer is also the limit.

The approval rules

Rusukh has two kinds of approval and they are not variations on each other. Customer approvals are the patron agreeing to something about their own order. Internal approvals are a second member of staff signing for a decision the first one is not permitted to take alone. Both are enforced in the application, not in a policy document: the act is refused until the approval exists.

Customer approvals — the seven sign-offs

These are the points at which the patron, and only the patron, decides. Each one blocks the work that comes after it; C1–C3 in particular hold the cutting desk, because cut cloth cannot be uncut.

Code	What is being approved	Requested by	Threshold	SLA
C1_FABRIC_COLOUR	Fabric & Colour Approval The customer must approve the fabric and colour before it is cut.	measurement_rep	always	24 h
C2_STYLE_QUANTITY	Style & Number of Suits The customer must confirm the style and how many suits are being ordered.	measurement_rep	always	24 h
C3_MEASUREMENTS_FIT	Measurements or Reference Fit The customer must sign off the measurements, or the reference garment fit, before cutting.	measurement_rep	always	24 h
C4_PRICE_CHARGES	Price & Charges The customer must approve the quoted price and any listed charges before the order is confirmed.	customer_service	always	12 h
C5_DELIVERY_DATE	Delivery Date The customer must agree the promised delivery date.	customer_service	always	12 h

Code	What is being approved	Requested by	Threshold	SLA
C6_DESIGN_CHANGE	Design Changes Control rule U2: any unapproved design change invalidates the prior approval and must be re-confirmed.	measurement_rep	always	24 h
C7_ADDITIONAL_COST	Additional Cost No extra cost may be added to an order without customer approval.	customer_service	always	12 h

Two different things are both numbered G1–G13, and it is worth separating them once.

The thirteen stage gates are the order's own checkpoints — G7 is "cutting complete", G9 is "QC approved" — and they are what the gate register in §7 lists. The approval codes below are a separate scheme from SOP §78: G3_FABRIC_CUTTING is the authorisation to start cutting, not the stage gate that records it as finished.

Where this document says a customer approval "holds G3", it means the approval code — the customer has not yet signed the specification, so cutting cannot be released.

Internal approvals — SOP §78

Each of these names an approver role, a money threshold where one applies, and a service level. Below the threshold the act proceeds untouched — a control that fires on ordinary work is one people learn to route around, so a Rs 500 purchase order does not wait for anybody.

Code	What it governs	Approver	Threshold	SLA
G1_QUOTATION_DISCOUNT	Large Discount Authorisation A discount beyond the standard band requires management sign-off before it is applied.	management	Rs 5,000	4 h
G13_PERIOD_LOCK_OVERRIDE	Financial Period Lock Override Reopening or adjusting	super_admin	always	24 h

Code	What it governs	Approver	Threshold	SLA
	a closed accounting period is a Super Root exception, logged with full audit.
G2_FABRIC_PURCHASE	Fabric Purchase Authorisation A fabric purchase order beyond the standard value requires management authorisation.	management	Rs 20,000	8 h
G3_FABRIC_CUTTING	Fabric Cutting Release Control rule U2: cutting may not proceed while a customer approval or specification question is open.	production_manager	always	2 h
G4_URGENT_ORDER	Urgent-Order Acceptance Accepting an order outside the normal production calendar requires management approval before it is confirmed.	management	always	1 h
G5_FABRIC_QC_DEVIATION	Fabric QC Deviation Clearance A minor fabric defect found at inspection may be cleared for use rather than rejected, on production sign-off.	production_manager	always	2 h
G6_REFUND_APPROVAL	Refund Approval A refund beyond the standard threshold	finance	Rs 3,000	8 h

	requires finance sign-off before it is processed.
G7_FREE_ALTERATION_EXCEPTION	Free Alteration Outside Policy An alteration offered free of charge outside the standard policy (not a Rusukh-error correction) requires sign-off.	production_manager	always	4 h
G8_DISPATCH_WITH_BALANCE	Dispatch With Outstanding Payment Control rule: dispatching before the balance is fully collected is an exception, not a default, and needs finance sign-off.	finance	always	1 h
G9_ORDER_CLOSURE_EXCEPTION	Order Closure Exception Closing an order with an unresolved payment or alteration requires management approval.	management	always	8 h
remake	Remake Authorisation SOP §43/§60: root cause first, then a management approval before a fresh garment is cut. Matches the required_role Production's RequestRemakeAction already stamps directly.	management	always	48 h

WHAT EACH ONE IS ACTUALLY PROTECTING

- G1 — discount. Stops a quotation being discounted into a loss by whoever wants the sale.
- G2 — fabric purchase. The person placing a supplier order cannot also be the person who approves the spend.
- G3 — cutting release. A cutting job cannot open against a specification the customer has not agreed to. This is the irreversible one.
- G4 — urgent order. Accepting a rush job reshuffles everybody else's promised dates, so somebody owns that decision.
- G5 — fabric QC deviation. A tolerance call on incoming cloth is recorded against a name instead of waved through.
- G6 — refund. Money leaving the business above the threshold needs finance.
- G7 — free alteration. A giveaway and a genuine Rusukh-error correction look identical in the ledger unless somebody signs for the difference.
- G8 — dispatch with balance. Sending goods before payment is a credit decision, not a dispatch decision.
- G9 — order closure. Closing an order writes it off in every report afterwards. It must not close while money is owed or work is outstanding.
- G13 — period-lock override. Reopening closed accounts is the only approval reserved to the super administrator, with the longest SLA in the set.

Where you will see these. Every raised request lands in the Approval Centre at `/admin/approvals/desk` , photographed in §7. Every decision on one is written to the audit trail at `/admin/audit/activity` , photographed at the end of that same section — a signature nobody can look up later is not a control.

Booking an order, step by step

This is a real order, created during the capture run, through the same four-step wizard an operator uses. Nothing here is a mock-up; the order number in the final figure was issued by the application while these pictures were being taken.

The fourth figure is the refusal, and it is deliberately included. A handbook that only shows the clean path teaches nothing about the day the form says no.

An order's life, station by station

From the board an order lands on to the ledger entry it eventually becomes. Each station below is photographed in its real seeded state — work genuinely sitting in it — rather than driven forward by the capture script.

Why these are not one continuous click-through. Advancing a single garment through all thirteen stage gates from a browser is a working day of clicking, and a capture run that mutated its way through production could not be re-run. What is shown instead is each station as it looks with real work in it, on a database whose gates were verified to re-evaluate as passing rather than merely stored as green. The click-through proof that each transition works is the automated suite — 2744 backend tests and 262 browser tests, summarised in §11.

G1 to G13. A garment cannot advance until its gate passes, and the gate is recomputed from its evidence rows every single time it is asked — a stored "passed" flag is never trusted on its own. That is why the seeded demo carries 569 evidence rows behind its 151 gates. Opened as qc_officer at /admin/orders/desk/gates.

Every screen in the panel, grouped as the sidebar groups them, each opened as a role confirmed able to reach it. Where a screen is shown under a modest role — the cutting desk as a QC officer, the catalogue as a production manager — that is itself the evidence: the least privileged person who needs that screen can genuinely open it.

Agent leaderboard

Sales agents ranked by confirmed orders, revenue and on-time delivery — trailing 90 days.

 Ranked by order attribution only
Revenue and on-time delivery come straight from confirmed and delivered orders. Commission-earned amounts are left off this board until the Commission module's figures can be trusted for ranking.

The customer's own account

The portal is a separate application behind a separate guard, and every query in it is scoped to the signed-in patron. A customer cannot see another customer's order, cannot select one in a dropdown, and cannot reach one by editing a URL.

The payment sequence at the end is real. A payment was genuinely taken during the capture run against a seeded balance, and the receipt in the figure is the one that transaction produced.

Submitting measurements

Measure yourself

About ten minutes. You will need a soft tape measure and, ideally, someone to help with the shoulder and the back.

- 1 Before you start
What you need, and how long it takes.
- 2 Neck Kameez
- 3 Shoulder Kameez
- 4 Chest Kameez
- 5 Waist Kameez
- 6 Hip / seat Kameez

1 Before you start

- Use a soft tape measure, not a metal builder's tape.
- Wear a thin shirt. Measuring over a jacket adds two inches nobody wants.
- Stand relaxed and breathe normally. Do not hold the tape tight.
- Your answers are saved as you go — you can close this and come back.

The screenshot displays the 'Appointments' section of the Rusukh user interface. A red rectangle highlights the 'Request a Home Visit' form and the 'Your Appointments' list. The form includes fields for 'Purpose of Visit' (set to 'Measurement visit'), 'Visit Address' (set to 'home (default)'), and 'Preferred Date' (06/09/2026). It also features time pickers for 'From' (10:00 am) and 'Until' (12:00 pm), and a 'Request Visit' button. The 'Your Appointments' list shows two entries: 'APT-2826-9999' (Delivery, Confirmed) and 'APT-2826-9991' (Measurement visit, Completed).

The dropdown holds only this customer's own orders. The amount is not an input: the server charges the advance, capped at the remaining balance.

A real payment, taken through the browser during this capture run, against a real seeded balance. The transaction listed on this screen is the one it created — an RCP- receipt number issued by the application, not a mock-up.

The first order in the list is freshly booked and not yet priced. Submitting against it is refused on screen with a plain explanation. This exact path used to be an uncaught 500; it is now a message, and a browser test keeps it that way.

The same screens on a phone and a tablet

Three widths are supported and all three are tested: 375, 768 and 1440. The figures below are the same screen at each, and each was checked programmatically for horizontal overflow at the moment it was photographed — the check the whole responsive requirement comes down to in practice.

This is a sample rather than the whole proof. Every screen tagged responsive in the browser suite runs at all three widths on every run; that is 261 browser tests, not three pictures.

The verification record

What has actually been run against the code these screenshots came from, on 2026-09-05 against PHP 8.2.28. The full procedure, including how to re-run each suite and how to tell a real failure from a saturated dev server, is in 04-TESTING-AND-VERIFICATION.md.

Suite	What it proves	Result
Pest — unit & feature	Every screen against every role, the money chain, the state machines	2716 passed, 0 failed 13,372 assertions
Pest — concurrency	Twelve documented races, with real OS processes at a wall-clock barrier	28 passed, 0 failed
Architecture	Module boundaries, no float money, no raw status queries, no hand-built Actions	267 passed, 0 failed
Playwright	A real browser at 375, 768 and 1440	262 passed, 0 failed
Clean install	<code>migrate:fresh --seed</code> from an empty database	no error
Seeded gate integrity	151 gates re-evaluated from 569 evidence rows	151 of 151 passing

Nothing was skipped, deleted or weakened to reach those numbers. A suite that goes green by removing a test proves less than the red one it replaced — and this project has been bitten more than once by a test that passed while covering nothing at all.
